

Somehow overnight, like rabbits, my hairdressers had increased to four and were getting more adventurous with each show

Shrug by Emily Brown

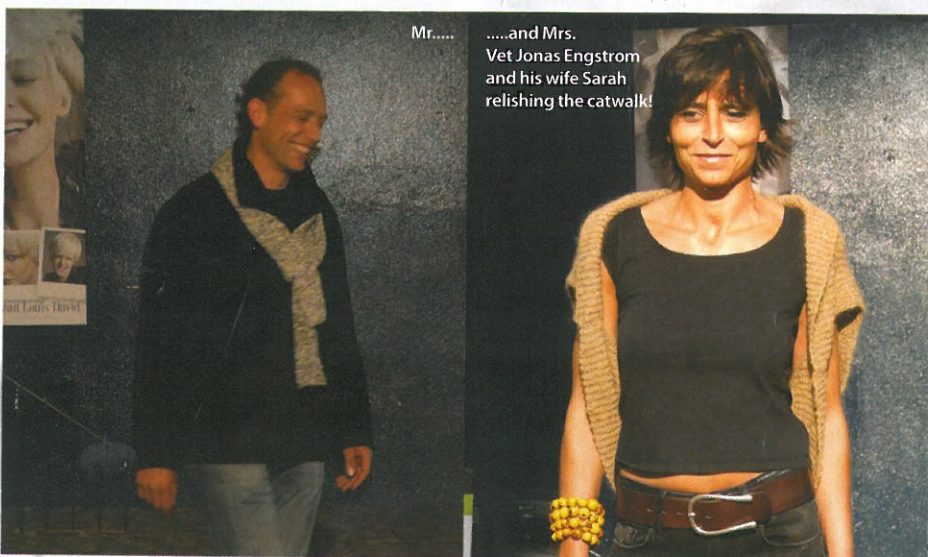

Some of the girls who wish to become professional models had arranged for a photographer to come and take photos for their portfolios so they asked if they could have some photos with the alpacas. Never being one to turn down an opportunity off we went, me and four models wearing suri alpaca. We walked through the Parc de Expo with a growing crowd of mainly men following behind to the show ring. I did apologise to the judge Rob Bettinson as the judging came to a halt and everything was taken in good spirits. Even Colin Ottery who was demonstrating shearing had to stop and stare.

VET IN A SPIN

Now I haven't mentioned that one of my models is my vet's wife Sara, even though a mother of two and 41 years young, Sara is absolutely stunning and natural and could easily give Miss Terralies a run for her money. For the final show we decided to do something different so Sara asked her husband, my vet, to model one of Emily's men's jackets and also I decided to get the wedding dress on Miss Terralies and walk it down the catwalk. It certainly got a rapturous reception from the crowd, perhaps it was worth all the hard work just for the gasps and cheers as Miss Terralies walked down full of pride.

Six o'clock and everything was coming to an end, all that was left was to clean up and reflect. Yes it had been a very good friendly show with people and breeders pitching in, thank you all for your help and support. One of the proudest things this weekend has been watching the girls grow with confidence and blossom. Oh Enid and I won supreme champion suri, fantastic. See you all next year thank you bye. Oh god shearing tomorrow. ●

Mr.....
.....and Mrs.
Vet Jonas Engstrom
and his wife Sarah relishing the catwalk!

Linda centre with Sonia Lutz and Emily Brown